The Lord Mayor's Dinner.

The Dresses, the Singing and Speeches The dinner at the Mausion House is a stately affair. Alighting at the door you are received by men in gorgeous liveries and ushered up a long stairway to a great hall. There stand the Lord and Lady Mayoress and some young and beautiful representative of the family, to whom obeisance is made in taking your stand to the right or left. Thence you watch the guests as their names are shouted out and they advance to touch the hand of handsome a man as one cares to see. One choir responded with Ben Jonson'sis impressed by the degree to which the Church has warded off the usages that prevail even in aristocratic society with regard to lidies. make a note of this. When the heavier part of the dinner is over the toast master invites us to charge our glasses, and proceeds to call out the names of eminent persons present, beginning with the Archbishop of Canterbury and ending with a dissenter, with whom be and the company will drink. The great silver "loving cup" journeys around from hand to hand, each taking a dranght of ant contents. Then the Lord Mayor pro-Cases Sugar Cured Oregon work to do. The Archbishop, staid, plain, Quaker-like, rises and makes a speech which I have heard several times before; but it is good, it is brief, it is unobjectionable, and I like to hear him make it. But now there occurs one of those incidents there is provided an instrumental band, which discourses sweet music while peo-

After that they are apt to be left to their own devices; and so it happened on the present occasion that the pious and solemn address of the Archbishop of Canterbury was collocated with the following song from Peter Pindar, addressed "To a Kiss," set to music by Beale :-

Receius a Cow.

The man across the way who enjoyed vegetables fresh from his own garden through the summer has bought a cow. His wife told him how nice it would be to have a cow on the premises, to have milk fresh and pure every day, and always in time, and always in abundance. Then they could make butter themselves, and not eat the rank stuff out of the store. She told him there was enough stuff from the garden and table to almost keep a cow, and the product would be just about so much clear gain. He figured it up himself with a pencil, and the result surprised him. He wondered why he had not kept a cow before, and inwardly condemned himself for the loss he had been inflicting upon himself. Then he bought a cow. In the evening of its arrival he went out to milk it. But the animal was excited, by the strange surroundings, and stepped on our friend, and kicked over his pail, and What wag had got at the Lord Mayor's nearly knocked one of his eyes out with in the mud, which ended their interest some lady other than she who has so long The singing at the Lord Mayor's was in the matter. He had been standing around, eagerly waiting for a chance, and grumbling because he did not get it and when the dasher was placed in his hands he was so happy that he could hardly contain himself. He pumped away for an hour at it; then he said if he had to do it any more he would run away and be a robber. At noon the man came home and learned the situation. He was a little disgusted at the "tom-foolery," as he called it, and took hold the churn himself and made it bounce for a while. Then his stomach commenced to fall in, and his spine to unjoint, and his shoulders to loosen. He everything in the way of oratorical effect work herself. At this the son put his cap under his jacket and miraculously disappeared. Later in the day the milk was soured around the vine. On the fifth day the cow knocked down a length of fence to the next lot, and ate all the oranges from a tree that stood in a tub, and when the people attempted to drive her out, she carried away a new ivy on her horns, knocked down a valuable vase of flowers, and capped the climax by stumbling over a box of mosses and falling on a pile of hot house frames. On the sixth day our neighbor sold his cow to a
